

Ming Ho
Set to the tune of "Swing Low"

E                    A E
He sings low, like an elephant
E                    C#m7 B
Strumming on an old banjo,
                  E                    A E
He's Ming Ho, his voice is elegant,
                  C#m7                    B E
But it's deeper than a buffalo's

E                                    A                    E
When he looks at his music, what does he say
                  E                    C#m7 B
When he tries to sing arpeggios?
                  E                    A                    E
"This is way too high!" so he throws it all away
                  C#m7                    B E
Good thing he owns his own capo!

                  E                    A                    E
He sings low, like Andre the Giant,
                  E                    C#m7 B
As he's stomping on a wrestling foe.
                  E                    A E
He's Ming Ho, his voice is reliant,
                  C#m7                    B E
Like a woofer on a stereo.

                  E                                    A                    E
On her birthday Ming bought Andrea a cake,
                  E                    C#m7 B
With the birthday candles all a-glow.
                  E                                    A                    E
But she never saw it, 'cause Ming caused a small earthquake,
                  C#m7                    B E
When he serenaded her solo.
